Saturday Night. Last Saturday evening, just as the sun began to sink beyond the brilliant hues of our western horizon, and the towns-people began to button up their coats to baffle the invading chill, a mysterious vehicle drawn by four swift coursers was seen to steal swiftly out of Florence and vanish into the gathering gloom. Five impatient faces peered forward as if the ee was far too slow, and vanishing like a flash with the retreating apparation Though the unusual train defied any attempt at "shadowing," Yet the paticu lars have come back in gratifying detail It turns out to be a party of five ambi-tions and sport-loving merchants of Florence. From the subsequent experience it might be thought that they were hunting the fabulous "snipe," but touth com-

every now and then, completely outdid his former record. The admiration of the swift evolutions of the art were pro-duced, and astonishment gave way to fear

The laugh that arose at a sprinkling of muddy water would be cut short by a dash through the stinging overhanging branches of a mesquite tree; and when the scratched and bewildered crowd had just recovered their breath a teriffic jolt knock ed it all out again. The tactics were sud denly changed, and without a second's warning the coach spun around on one hind wheel and rushed off in the opposite direction. The rear occupants leaped out in wild dismay at each repetition of this startling performance. The front occu-pants would have done likewise had there been any way of doing so. Everyone's hair was on end, except that of the reckless engineer. He alone seemed be get-ting all the enjoyment of the ride.

Lewis Gilson of the Vekol was in town But merciful fate finally interposed: Just as the coach sank to the hubs in a The J. D. It stayed right there.

The fellows were just congratulating hemselves on the conclusion of the performance when their hopes were dashed to the ground by the driver's exclamation: "Three wheels are enough for me, any-how. Gif up there!"—and started up the wagon in a regular thumpety-bump-jump-out-or-get-killed fashion. This didn't last long, however, and the four victims took advantages of the lull in the stormy proceedings, to borrow a fresh wagon from Miller's ranch. With this they reached their goal, the duck pond, There will be from 3,000 to 5,000 white known as the 15 mile reservoir. AN ARIZONA PROJECT. A Railroad through the Grand Canyon of the Colorado.

Once more the project of building a railroad in the canon of the Colorado River has come up for consideration, and this time in such definite shape that it would seem that before very long the un lertaking would be actually begun. The project has always been a very popular one with engineers, owing partly to the al-most insurmountable obstacles to be overome. The country is so wild, the moun-ins so high, the walls arising on both lofty, that the mere work of surveying this district has been almost impossible. This, however, has at last been accomplished, and it is now announced that the work is by no means as hopeless as has always been supposed—in fact, that it is perfectly feasible.

In 1869, Major Powell, of the United States Geological Survey, made his memorable trip down the Colorado River, he and his party being the only persons who had ever succeeded in accomplishing this feat. Since then several attempts have laughter that floated over the bosom of the dark pond, derisively echoing them- fatally, and it was destined that this scientist should for twenty years, hold The mud-begrimmed object waded to-ward the canal bank as the shortest way out; but here a charmel had been cut, and to swim was the only alter-men and surveyors started to make the denative. He did this, and came through scent of the river, and succeeded in reach-the icy waters a sadder and more ex-ing a point about the middle of the Marble Cañon, when disaster overtook them, Since that time, the rest of the river has been traversed and examined, and the report of the chief engineer, Mr. Robert B. Stanton, has been handed in to the direc-Pacific Railroad Company.

In spite of the loss of life that has been met with in making the surveys, the report of the engineer is favorable, and he from an engineering standpoint, but that the expense of building it will not be so great as to render the work impossible The entire length of the Colorado i about 2,000 miles, and it is navigable as far as Callville, a distance of some 600 fornia. The object of the present road is to connect the coal fields of Colorado with the Pacific coast. It is at present difficult much of the fuel used there being brought by steamer from foreign ports. Grand Junction, Colorado, which point is the Denver and Rio Grande Railroad.

The new road has been surveyed from that town to the Gulf of California, and also from the town of Yuma to San Diego, the most southerly seaport of California, this being a distance of 190 miles, and affording excellent commun California coast. The general sur vey has been divided as follows. Starting from Grand Junction and proceeding toward the mouth of the river, we find the subdivisions to be as follows:

Cataract and Narrow Canons Marble Cañon

From Grand Cañon to the Needles. 161 From Needles to Yuma and making a total of over a thousand miles. The engineers, under the able direction of Mr. Stanton, have prepared an exhaus-tive report, with a detailed description of the work required to be done and the material encountered. By a very complete series of photographs, over 900 in number, each principal section of work has been put on paper, and the descrip-tion refers to each photograph, by means of which the character of the work can be

The first part of the route from Grand Junction down the Grand River to the great difficulties. In fact, the Denver and Rio Grande Western R. R. have con structed a road along one bank of the river that is already in operation. The great difficulties of the route are not encountered until the great gorge of the Marble and Grand Canons are reached. Of the 62 miles of road through the Mar talus slopes, 22 on cliff bonch work. There are about 21/2 miles of tunnel. The Grand difficulty that it is possible for the road engineer to encounter. Of the 217 miles through this section, 51 miles are hillside slopes, 43 heavy talus slopes, 11 miles cliff bench work, 19 miles marble bench work, 85 miles of sloping granite walls. Of the total length of the road, ting to 1,019 miles, 403 miles are rough what is known as earth work. done with plow and scraper, as in any miles of hillside sloves consist of earth and loose rock. The 191 miles of rough talus slopes consist of loose rock and bowlders and earth with slopes of strati-fied lime and sandstone. There are 99 miles of excavation through solid granite

There would be in all about 20 Should this road be completed, it will open up a country that is practically closed to-day to the general traveler. The country is so rough and so extraor-dinary that only those who are especially favored with time, means, and physical strength can penetrate this wonderful region and enjoy its superior beauty.
Clarence E. Dutton, of the U S
Geological Survey, in one of his reports say that "Those who have long and care fully studied the Grand Canon of the Colorado do not hesitate for a moment to pronounce it by far the most sublime of all earthly speciacles. If its sublimity consisted only in its dimensions, it could be sufficiently set forth in a single sentence. It is more than 200 miles long. GLOBE.

On Sunday, November 2, as John Roberts was riding over the range on the south side of the tilla looking for stock, Robbin's Butte and a short distance from the river, an offensive odor was wafted from among some cottonwoods beyond. Thinking that some of his cattle might have died, he rods in the direction and was attracted by a man's coat hanging on a limb of a fallen cottonwood. Riding up to it he was horrified to find lying on the ground, the remains of a man in an advanced stage of decomposition. salaries all along the line.
Fruit trees in the valley are looking ex ceedingly well. The frost killed most of the fruit this year, but the trees being young it has given them a chance to get a full year's growth, and they will be loaded with fine fruit next season. Graham county will continue to pros-per. A county with so much good land, water, mines and stock ranges cannot be kent in the back ground. The new school house in Solomonville is about completed, and school will begin next Monday. The building is an at-tractive one, built of brick. Barnabe Palm will be the Solomonville justice of the peace for the next two The Wham robbery cartoon cut no fig-ure in the election.
